Activity Overview

AFFINITY MATRIX
General Description	This exercise will give participants a great insight into the importance of good communication practice, insight into their own values and at the same time, provide the educator information about relevant examples and ways to adapt their training.
Materials	Chairs where students can sit while discussing, big enough and quiet classroom for all the participants.
Duration	30-60 minutes
Feasibility	The activity is feasible for pairs of students, preferably in class.

Activity

1. Split your group of participants into pairs of two.
2. Encourage a dialogue - the first discussed topic should be "What are the three most important things for you in learning", and the next one should be "What are the three most important things for you in the workplace".
3. After a discussion, sum up the exercise with the following queue: "Based on the three most important things for you and your companion, try to construct a common top 3".
4. Lastly, encourage participants to discuss the things they agreed upon with their pairs as well as observations related to their communication experience.
